Meredith Aitken works in both acrylic and oil in her studio at 1000 Parker Street in Vancouver. She enjoys combining painting, collage, and printmaking techniques.

Much of Meredith's work draws upon her environment with a focus on layers, colour and composition.

"It documents the subtle shifts in light and color that to me define a place," explains Meredith, "As soon as a painting is complete, there is a disconnect; the work becomes something new in itself."

She has also recently been exploring interiors, exteriors, and expectations.

While the subject matters may vary, Meredith's work examines the various disconnects between interiors and facades; and sources and representations.

Meredith has degrees in earth science and an ASC in painting from Emily Carr University of Art & Design. She received the 2014 Carole Badgley Emerging Artist Award from the Seymour Art Gallery, BC. Her work has been exhibited in BC and various locations in the US, and she is looking forward to the upcoming Eastside Culture Crawl, November 16-19. Stop by and say hello to Meredith!

Meredith has subscribed to The Artist's Journal for approximately five years, finding it very helpful to learn about art opportunities and exhibitions.
